DEDICATION

Josephine E. Abercrombie

Founder, The Lexington School

"I took some years to think about what I wanted to do.
Finally I decided: a school for the brightest students, a place where their young minds could be stretched even further.
When I visit now and see those bright little faces,
looking forward to something, it thrills me.
My original dream has not been lost."

Look How Far We Have Come

Out on a field trip the other day, a Lexington School class had been heading up a hill for some time when, near the top, one of the students stopped, turned around and said, "Look how far we have come!"

And look how far The Lexington School has come. In just four decades this remarkable country day school has taken its place alongside the nation's strongest schools, earning a place of prominence that other schools took centuries to claim.

This success has come as a result of our Founder's early dream. Josephine Abercrombie intended to make The Lexington School "worthy of national emulation." She dreamed large, challenging this community.

And our challenge today is to take the recent Strategic Vision and the coordinate Campus Master Plan and keep dreaming large, stretching ourselves to make this school all it can be for today's students and tomorrow's. It is only by moving forward that we can maintain our academic excellence.

The Strategic Vision of the school challenges us in the following areas:

• The Lexington School will recruit, develop and maintain a stable and diverse group of highly-qualified, dynamic teachers, support staff members and administrators with special attention to professionals of national caliber who are flexible, collaborative, innovative, reflective and student-centered.

• Strengthening its tradition of academic excellence, The Lexington School will develop one of the nation's outstanding elementary educational programs, preparing confident students of high moral standards for demanding secondary school experiences.

• The Lexington School will continue to develop programs that foster strong alumni relationships and invigorate their involvement in the school.

• The Lexington School will strengthen its financial base to become less tuition-dependent so that the mission and practices are supported in perpetuity. The school must plan prudently and in advance to ensure the financial stability and future growth necessary for the operation of an outstanding independent school.

As we look collectively over our shoulders at "how far we have come," we are indebted to the thousands and thousands of people, students, teachers, parents, trustees and others, who have given so much of themselves, their funds and their time to this special place. As we move on through graduation and other pursuits, we leave something of ourselves behind. The Lexington School today is the accumulation of two generations of talent and love.

The series of activities throughout this fortieth year would not have been possible without the overall organizational efforts of our chair, Marijo Foster; the indefatigable alumni work of Lucy McKinstry '66; the student convocation organization of Ann Eames; and the ambition of Alumni Council President Cy Alexander '75. In addition, this exciting commemorative book, which like the school surpasses our most ambitious dreams, has been produced by Whitney Martin '88, who culled through files, worked the phone, edited, researched, prodded and begged to pull all this together into one place. We owe Whitney much for recapturing what otherwise would have been lost.

As much as we have enjoyed the fortieth events, we look forward eagerly to this school's fiftieth, hoping that, as has occurred throughout this school's proud history, all of us will be able to say that what we continue to do for our students keeps surpassing our dreams. This school community has always surprised itself, and we anticipate that it will continue to in the future.

Sincerely,

John D. Fixx, Headmaster
Samuel A.B. Boone '75, President of the Board of Trustees

A History of The Lexington School

According to Josephine Abercrombie, Founder of The Lexington School, "A school is only an idea." If that is the case, then what a tremendous idea The Lexington School has been and still is today. Over 40 years ago, Mrs. Abercrombie envisioned an excellent independent school that would serve children in Kentucky's Bluegrass Region. With her husband, H. Burnett Robinson, she dedicated herself to making her dreams become reality, and on September 14, 1959, the doors of The Lexington School opened to 59 students.

Mrs. Abercrombie and Mr. Robinson began their journey by visiting several of the top schools in the United States and by corresponding with numerous renowned educators. After accumulating knowledge about what a leading private school should offer and represent, they began searching for financial backing.

Mrs. Abercrombie's father, James S. Abercrombie, created a foundation that underwrote the endeavor until active community members could contribute to the funding and management of The Lexington School. An advisory committee was established which was composed of Hal Price Headley, Gilmore H. Nunn, H. Burnett Robinson and E. Barry Ryan.

This committee assisted the Founders in selecting professional leadership and by providing counsel and advice when needed. After much research, the Founders hired Wood and Sibert of Cos Cob, Conn., to design the school along with architect William Gray of Gray and Coblin in Frankfort, Ky.

In 1958, 7.4 acres of prime land on Lane Allen Road were acquired from Hal Price Headley. Later, in 1960, an additional 10.8 acres of Headley's Beaumont Farm, adjacent to the school, were added to complete the campus.

As construction began, a crew of workers was brought in from Pin Oak Farm. In the winter months, to keep the concrete from freezing, horse manure covered the freshly poured footing; just one example of the Founders' determination and ingenuity!

E. Francis Bowditch of Rye, N.H., was hired as a consultant. He organized and recruited a faculty and board. Frederick L. Luddy was hired as headmaster of The Lexington School. Luddy, a graduate of Amherst College, had previously taught at Hopkins Academy in Hadley, Mass., as well as at The Gabel School in Portland, Ore.

Additional teachers were brought on board, and throughout the month of July 1959, the newly hired teachers attended a workshop to translate the Founders' plans into a working curriculum.

Tuition in 1959 was $400 for kindergarten, $650 for grades 1-3 and $800 for grades 4-6. This fee included lunches, books, supplies and physical education attire.

During Mr. Luddy's time, the enrollment rose to 120, and seventh and eighth grades were added. At the close of the 1960-61 school year, Frederick Luddy resigned as headmaster to assume duties at Brandeis University.

In June 1961, Norton G. Pritchett, Jr. assumed duties as headmaster of the school. "Bud" was a University of Virginia graduate. He had previously taught in Norfolk, Va.'s public schools and served as the founding headmaster of Belfield School in Charlottesville, Va.

Forty Years of Excellence 1959-1999

As of September 1961, the total enrollment of the school reached 143. At this time in 1962, the Founders undertook the first addition to the physical plant. The new space included four classrooms, an art room, doubled the size of the existing gymnasium and provided boys' and girls' locker rooms. 1963 saw the first graduating class from The Lexington School.

In 1966, the Founders added a Montessori program, and double sections of each grade level were created as enrolment steadily increased. In 1971, the first community underwritten building addition took place. The board was successful in raising $457,762 for construction. Chrisman, Miller and Wallace architectural firm designed the new structure built by White and Congleton. The addition provided eight new classrooms, new science and art facilities, a faculty room and ample storage space. In 1971, 261 students enrolled and found a much larger school awaiting them.

By the end of the 1977-78 school year, enrollment had grown to 414 students. Another addition, costing $574,000, and designed and built by the same 1971 companies was added. Three new classrooms, science facilities, art rooms and a gymnasium with a full-sized basketball court were included in the addition.

Mr. Pritchett resigned as headmaster at the close of the 1980-81 school year after having served for 20 years. He was succeeded by Richard O. Schwab, a graduate of Brown and Harvard. Mr. Schwab had held positions at the Fessenden School in West Newton, Mass., and the University Liggett School in Grosse Point, Mich.

From 1981 to 1984, the school's fine arts offerings were expanded. Instrumental music and speech were added to the curriculum, and in the spring of each year a Fine Arts Festival took place. Computer technology was introduced into the curriculum in 1982-83 with the addition of 11 IBM and two Apple computers.

In 1983, the school was once again renovated at a cost of $104,960. Lower school classrooms were enlarged, administrative offices were consolidated, and locker rooms were relocated to the gym.

Mr. Schwab resigned in 1984 to return to his native Cincinnati. He was succeeded by Stuart P. Smith as Interim Headmaster. Prior to coming to Lexington, Mr. Smith had held a similar position at Episcopal High School in Jacksonville, Fla.

In 1985, Dr. David Lowry was hired as headmaster. Lowry had earned a Ph.D. in Child Psychology from Columbia University and worked at The Cranbrook School in Michigan before coming to TLS. While at TLS, Lowry developed the curriculum more fully, as well as professional development opportunities for teachers. Lowry worked hard to increase the faculty endowment, and he also implemented the yearly dinner and auction, Celebration.

An after-school program was also added to the daily schedule. In 1986, a fine arts wing and upper school hallway were designed by architect, Charles A. Jolly and built by White and Congleton.

David Lowry resigned in 1995 and was succeeded by Bob Davis of Columbia, S.C. who previously worked at The Hammond School. Under Davis, the school's divisions were reconfigured. Lower School included Montessori through fifth grade, and Upper School consisted of grades six through nine.

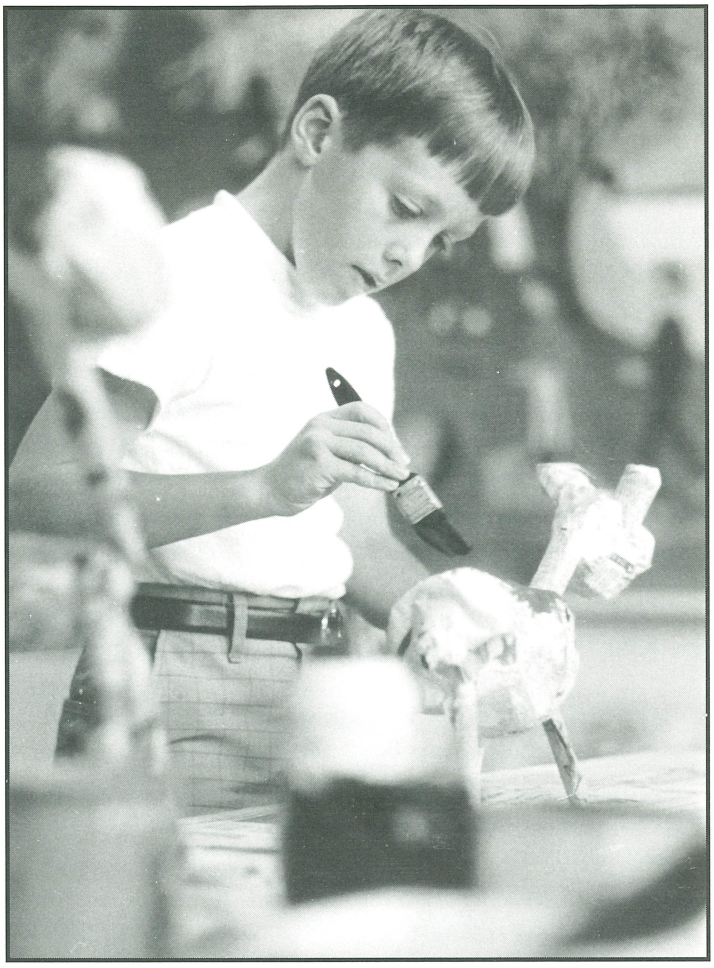

Davis resigned in 1997 to be succeeded by Interim Head, Molly Strassner. Strassner reorganized the school divisions into preschool, lower, middle and freshman year, and today they remain the same. Strassner resigned in 1998 to be succeeded by John Fixx.

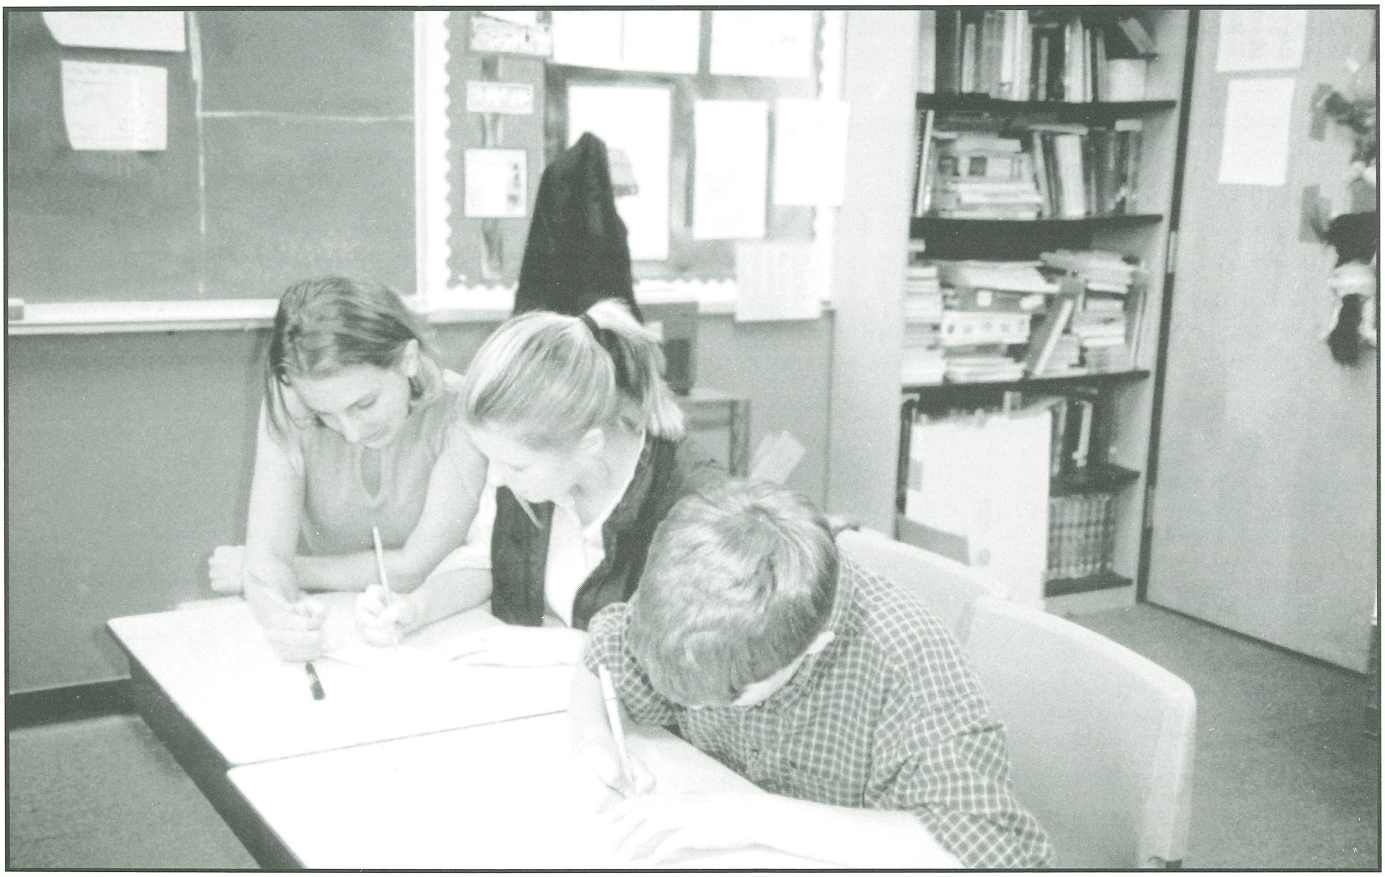

Fixx, his wife Liza, and two children, Nat and Emily, moved from Madison, Conn., where he had been assistant headmaster at The Country School. Fixx had also held positions at Westminster School, Bancroft School and Hoosac School.

The Lexington School is currently thriving under Fixx's leadership. John Fixx has succeeded in helping Lexington School members know and value their past, and look with innovation and wisdom to the future. Here's to 40 more wonderful years of making history!

Curriculum

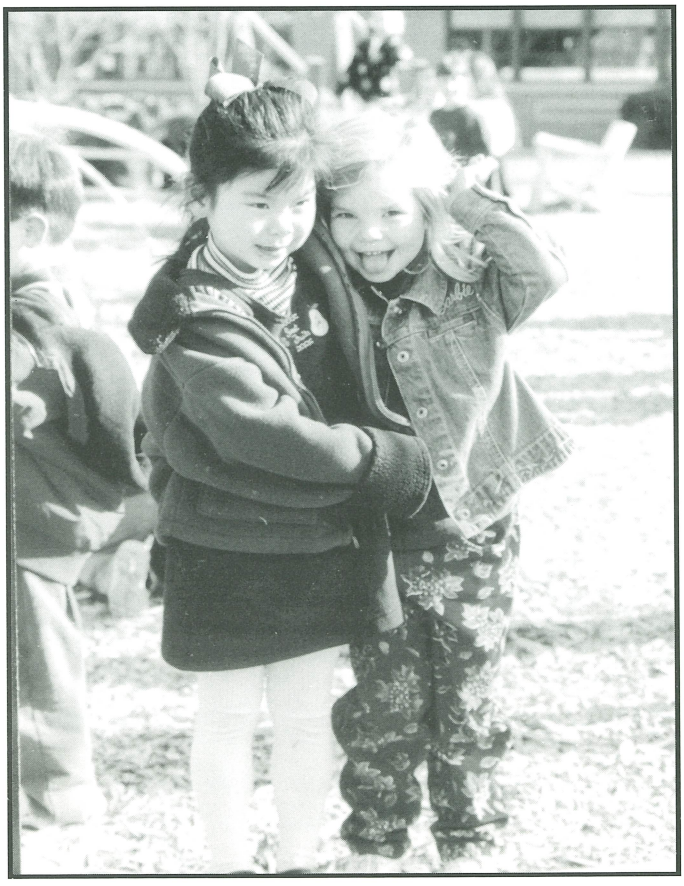

For 40 years, The Lexington School has offered a traditional program that teaches in innovative ways. Emphasis is placed on student-centered learning, and small class size not only encourages every child's participation but also allows teachers to tailor their expectations for the abilities of each child. In 1959, the school's first students benefited from academic staples such as mathematics, English, history, foreign language and science, as well as the fine arts, Latin, journalism and physical education. Throughout the years, The Lexington School has continued to give its students the skills they will need to thrive in a changing world. Computer literacy and technological skills, cultural diversity and global awareness, are just some of the areas that have developed to prepare students for today's world. Lower school classrooms are safe places to explore new domains, and the middle grades help students to understand the importance of cross-curricular learning. Today, the curriculum is still worthy of national emulation. From language arts and transitional mathematics to computer art and lacrosse, Lexington School students continue to go out into the world, prepared, aware and highly educated.

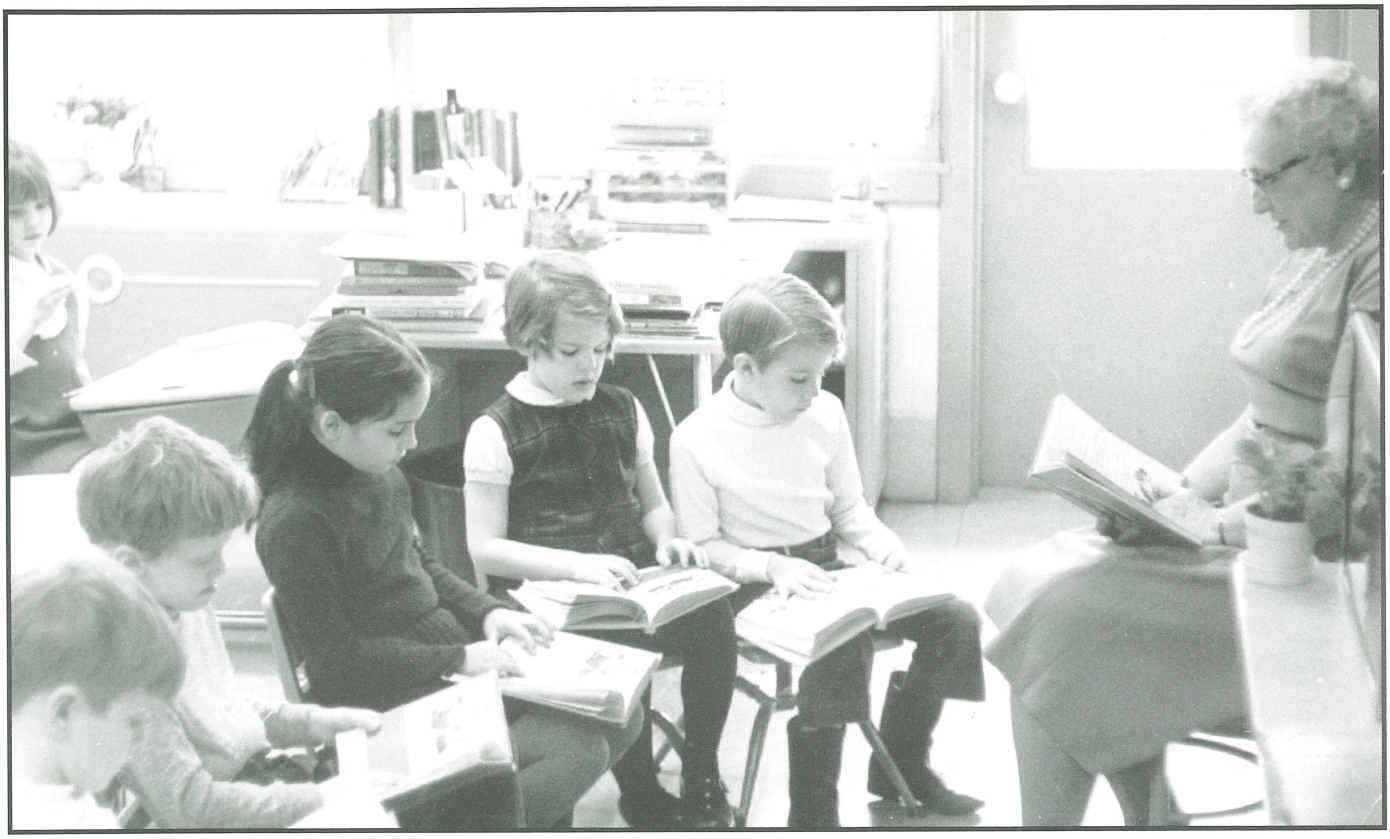

Preschool

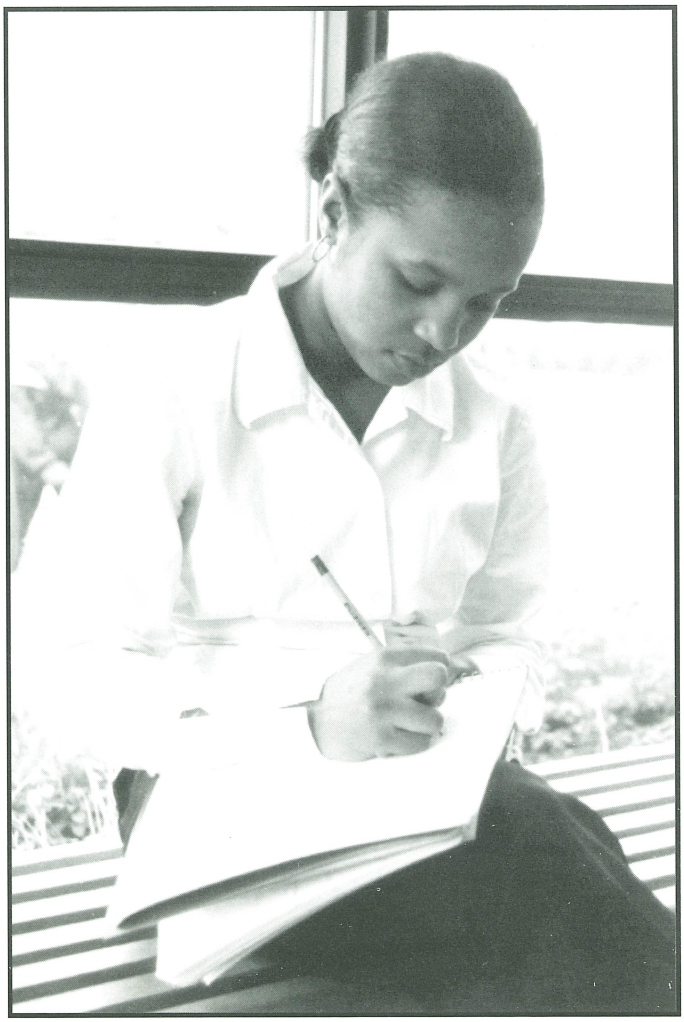

Ever since The Lexington School opened its doors, the curriculum has been planned with young children in mind. Kindergarten classes have been offered since opening day in 1959, and soon after, Prekindergarten and one of the first Montessori programs in the area were added to the curriculum. In 1999, Kinderklasse, a program for three-year-olds, was also added. The Lexington School has consistently employed highly qualified teachers who ensure a warm and caring atmosphere. The preschool curriculum has always been geared toward providing educational experiences that fit children's developmental needs, with programs that are appropriate to the cognitive, language, social-emotional and psychomotor skills and needs of each child. In addition, even the youngest TLS students participate in the fine arts, foreign language program and physical education. The Lexington School believes that preschool is a place to become excited about learning, to participate in new experiences, to ask questions and find adequate time to seek answers. It is a special opportunity to develop new personal relations and to grow emotionally.

English Language Arts

From the first days of the English and language arts department to today, Lexington School students have been privileged to receive a comprehensive education in literature, grammar, writing and research skills. Whether it's a first grade student learning consonant blends, a fourth grader learning the importance of a daily journal, or a freshman reading Brave New World, the challenge and benefits of this department have remained consistent and strong. Often, quality literature is integrated in other subject areas, which helps students to open their minds and make connections. Since the early 1980's, fourth, fifth and sixth grade students have enjoyed writing and author labs. Today, the third grade takes part in a writer's guild where they compose their own books. Lexington School students even have the opportunity to learn about the world of journalism by joining the school newspaper or yearbook staff. For 40 years, students have participated in school literary magazines and community readings, distinguishing themselves beyond the TLS hallways as individuals adept at comprehension and communication.

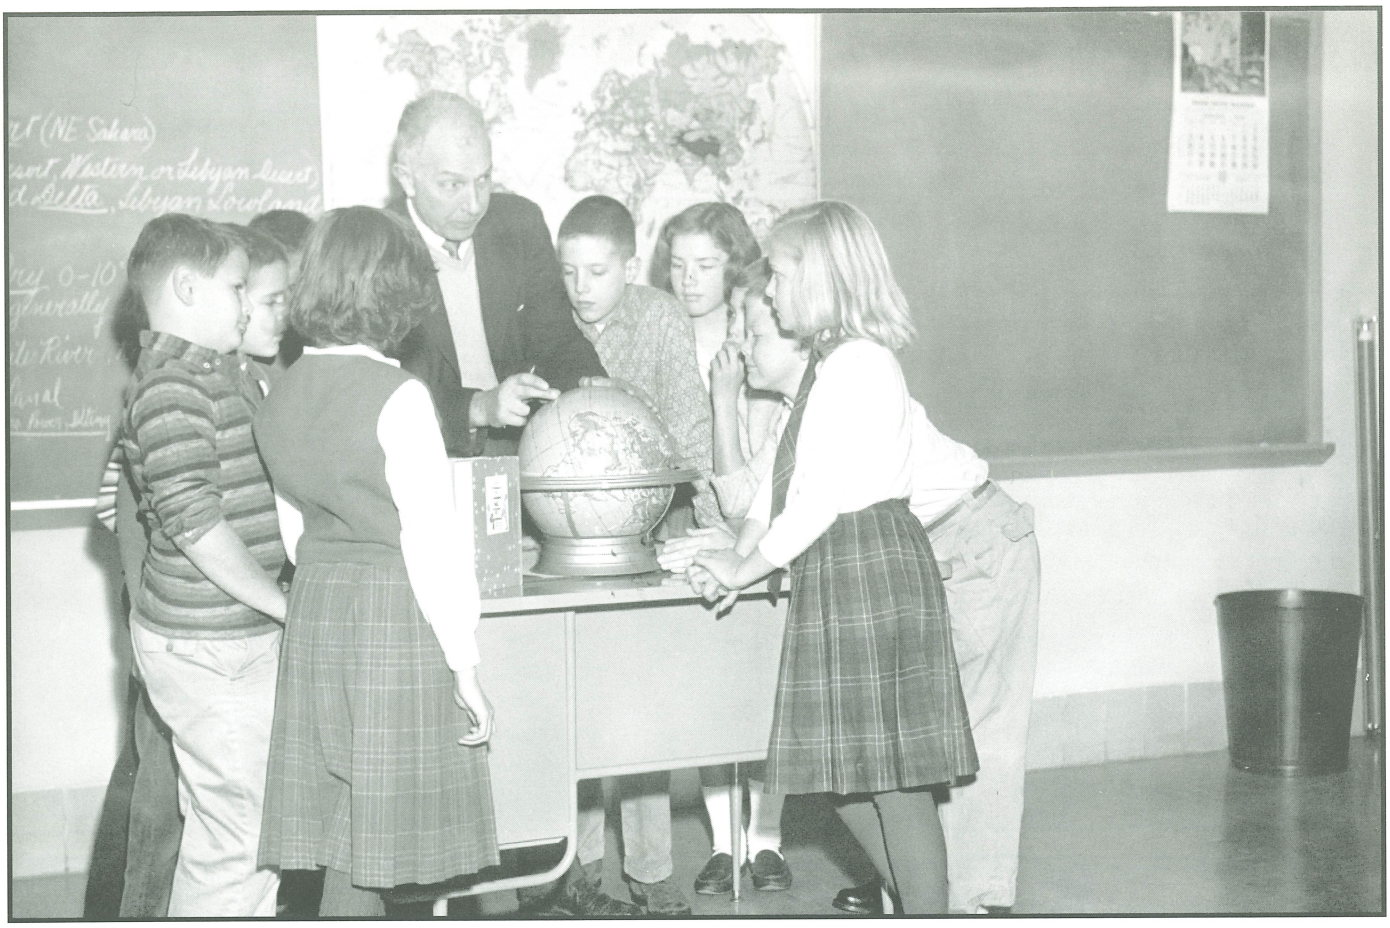

Mathematics

Lexington School math students know that XL not only means 40 in Roman numerals, but it could also stand for the XL-lence of the school's mathematics program throughout the past 40 years. Students have always been taught traditional math skills in the lower grades that prepare them well for middle school courses like algebra and geometry. This lower school approach is known as Everyday Mathematics which expands the range of mathematics experience by focusing on hands-on activities and cooperative approaches. Today, middle schoolers benefit from Transitional Mathematics courses which stress realistic and conscious application of formulas and concepts. Certain approaches to learning math have stood the test of time at TLS, most likely because the teachers know the importance of combining fun and facts. Some examples include: The Metric Olympics, Pi Day, and building and flying tetrahedron kites.

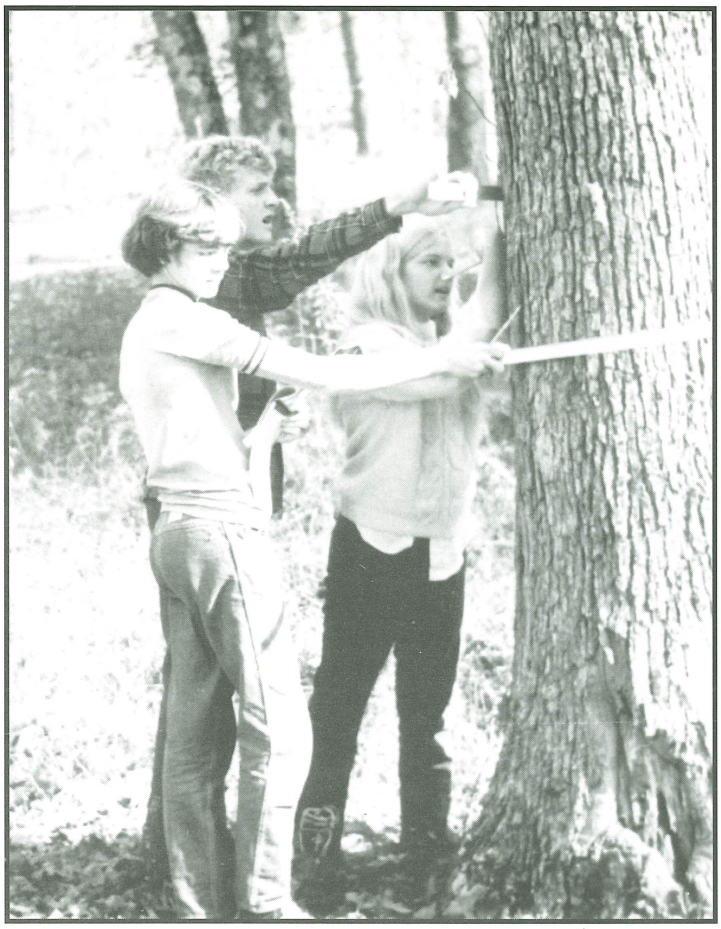

History
Social Studies

The Lexington School's social studies department has brought an awareness of the world and its people to students for four decades. Young students begin their social studies journeys by reading maps, celebrating various ethnic holidays and exploring their own family trees and timelines. Fourth grade students learn both United States and Kentucky history and geography, and by middle school, students study a range of topics from the Civil War to civics and the Middle Ages to the Middle East. Traveling to Washington, D.C. in the higher grades has been a Lexington School staple, and new traditions are born every year, particularly ones that focus on cultural diversity and global awareness. This year, students supported the local Martin Luther King, Jr. March and joined in the school Chinese New Year Parade and Greek Festival. For 40 years, the social studies and history department has tirelessly given students the gifts of knowledge, curiosity and tolerance. It's no wonder that so many TLS students go on to make history themselves!

Science

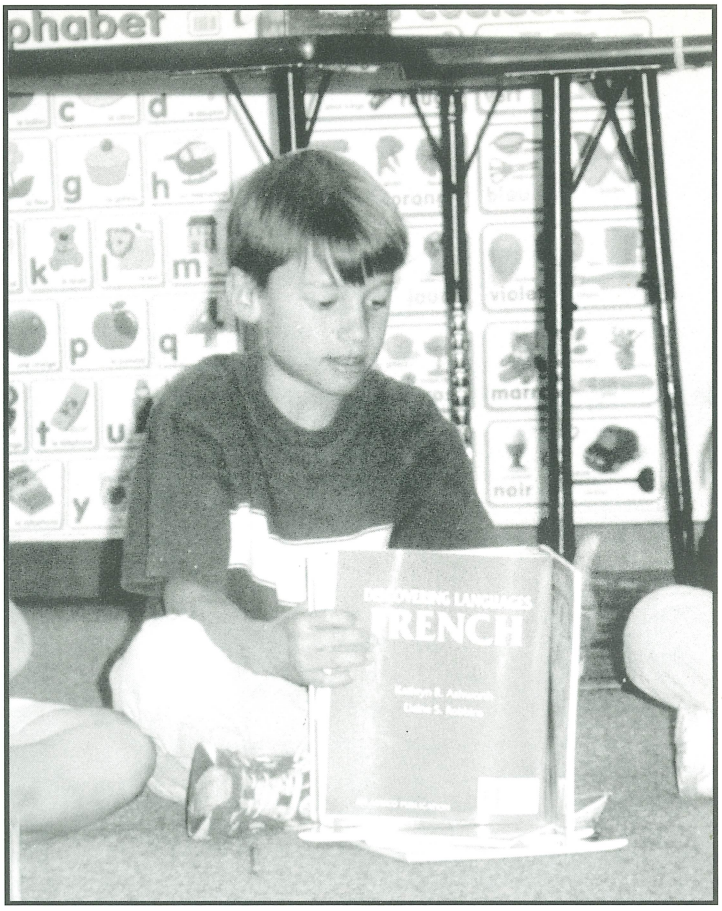

Since 1959, a firm understanding of the scientific realm has been emphasized strongly at The Lexington School. Whether it's a second grader examining a snowflake or an eighth grader peering through a microscope, everywhere you look you can find TLS students challenged and awestruck by the natural world. This department has maintained its strength over 40 years, amidst environmental changes and technological advancements, by combining both standard studies with cutting-edge explorations. The science department includes even the youngest members of the TLS community; the school was the first in Lexington to have a preschool science lab. In the middle grades, students take on the worlds of astronomy, geology, anatomy, biology, chemistry and physics through a variety of learning methods. TLS students have always been pioneers in nature, from the days of Pine Mountain to present excursions to Bradford Woods, the American Southwest and Green River Preserve. TLS students have consistently learned the importance of stretching both body and mind.

Foreign Language

The founders of The Lexington School believed that staying one step ahead was the way to achieve excellence. One way the school has pursued that goal is through its foreign language program. At The Lexington School, students get an early start in foreign language and have since its inception in 1960 when French, Spanish and Latin were introduced. Today, if you look inside the new Kinderklasse room, you can see three-year-olds learning their first French and Spanish words. Lower schoolers focus on vocabulary and culture and middle schoolers tackle reading and writing in the target language. During freshman year, classes are intimate and intensive, preparing students for accelerated high school courses. Over the years, students have celebrated French and Spanish cultures in a variety of ways, by traveling to France and Spain, competing in local festivals, and preparing dinners, puppet shows and skits. This year, Spanish students created elaborate dioramas for the Mexican holiday Day of the Dead. French students hosted a crepe dinner and performed the play, The Little Prince.

Fine Arts

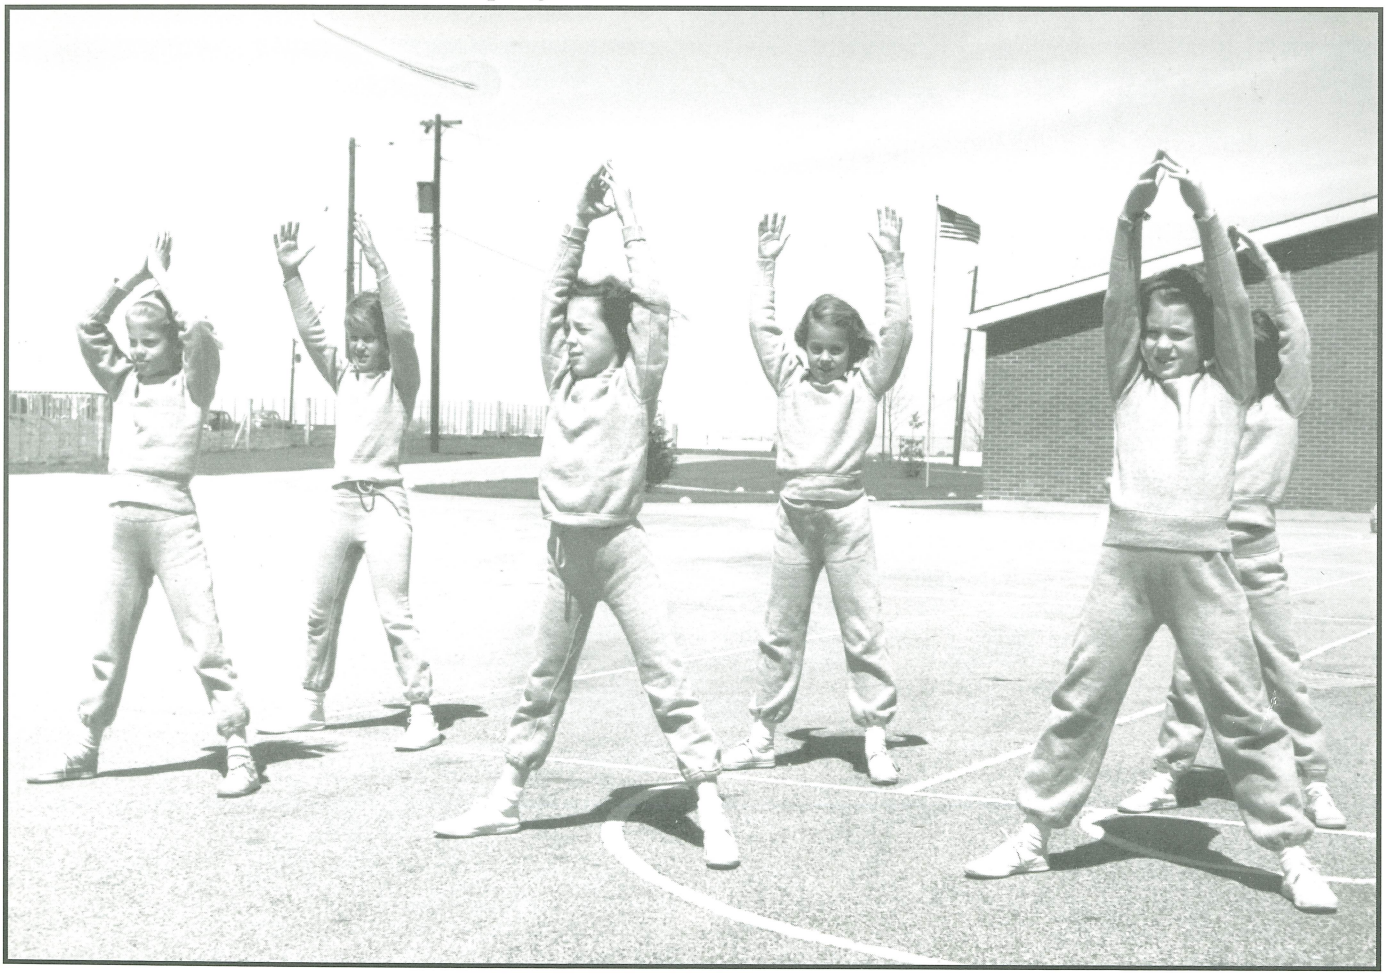

Since 1959, The Lexington School has firmly believed that immersion in the fine arts is crucial to a student's wholeness. Music, drama and the visual arts have always been a part of the TLS curriculum, not only through the classes offered, but also through frequent assemblies that feature visiting artists and musicians. On a daily basis, all students at TLS participate in at least one of the three fine arts areas. In the musical realm, students not only take vocal classes, but they learn how to play an instrument, such as the recorder or dulcimer. Many go on to choose their own instrument and participate in instrumental music. Dramatics have stood the test of time at TLS, from the days of the spring musical to the current Thanksgiving play and ninth grade production. Speech, debate and public speaking are taught to students in the middle grades, and they become adept at thinking on their feet. The visual arts include every imaginable medium from paint, charcoal, clay, glass and fabric to computer-generated art and graphics. This year, an impressive student art show was held at Lexington's Civic Center.

Physical Education Athletics

Mental and social development is balanced at The Lexington School by physical growth and team participation. The physical education department provides students with numerous ways to gain strength, confidence and a cooperative spirit, and it always has; it was one of the first schools in the area to not only offer an athletic program, but also soccer and lacrosse. Young children begin their education in physical fitness by sharpening their coordination skills. By the time children reach the higher grades, they will have been introduced to a variety of sports, from the traditional to the innovative. Volleyball, football, gymnastics, dancing, bowling, frisbee golf, softball and floor hockey are just some of the activities that are provided for TLS students. Freshman year, students take an intensive course in health, that teaches them about emotional and mental development, nutrition and disease prevention, and the dangers of drugs, alcohol and tobacco. All students have the opportunity to join one of the school's teams, from soccer and basketball in the fall and winter, to tennis and lacrosse in the spring.

Paths of Learning

Students have found numerous ways to develop their talents, minds and passions for more than 40 years at The Lexington School. Activities offered, both inside and outside the traditional curriculum, serve TLS children by helping them to fully develop, physically, socially, morally and mentally. In the early days of the school, students enhanced their studies by joining foreign language clubs and mathematic teams. Electives offered in the past included everything from needlework and typing to calligraphy and botany. Today, students are able to join the chess club and speech and debate team outside of school, and during the school day can sign up for classes such as creative writing and problem solving. Fifth grade students take classes in life skills and all TLS students study computer technology and library skills. Community service days teach students the importance of selflessness and connectedness to the world around them. At TLS, there is always time for fun and healthy competition; festivals, talent shows and school-wide celebrations have always been an important part of the school atmosphere. Whether a child is in class or out of class, while they are enrolled at The Lexington School, they are continually growing.

Celebrating Forty Years in Grand Style

During the 1999-2000 school year, Lexington School community members gathered together to celebrate The Lexington School's fortieth anniversary in grand style. Who could have predicted the immeasurable enthusiasm? Who could have known how many former students, teachers and families would return to join in the festivities with current TLS members?

Throughout the school year, a series of convocations, reunions and events were scheduled to toast 40 years. Thanks to Marijo Foster, Ann Eames and the Anniversary Committee, all events were timely and successful. Headmaster John Fixx was also instrumental in helping students and faculty members understand the importance of the school's past with regard to its present and future.

On the opening day of school, August 26, 1999, an all-school assembly was held in the gymnasium. Returning faculty members and students were welcomed back, and all new faces were introduced. Everyone was eager for the fortieth year and its celebrations to begin! On September 14, the first all-school convocation was held to honor the decade of the 1950's. Everyone dressed in appropriate attire. Amidst poodle skirts and penny loafers, large birthday cakes for TLS were wheeled out for everyone to enjoy.

The decade of the sixties was celebrated on October 21. "Hippies" joined together at the second convocation to learn more about the school and the world during the sixties. Alumni and former faculty spoke to the audience about their experiences at The Lexington School. On October 29, the annual Fall Festival was held in conjunction with an all-school Family Birthday Party.

A special highlight of the fall was the return of first headmaster, Frederick Luddy. He and his wife Judy arrived from Amherst, Mass., and enjoyed a wide variety of parties and assemblies while in Kentucky. Luddy inspired and humored all with his wisdom and anecdotes at school gatherings. In addition to a library reception honoring Luddy, an alumni and former faculty cocktail party was held at Jonabell Farm.

December arrived and with it, The Lexington School's second headmaster, Mr. Norton G. Pritchett. Mr. Pritchett was warmly greeted at a large reception at school. Current faculty even made a candy wreath and hung it over the library door in honor of "Bud." The traditional Holiday Concert was truly special, and it was dedicated to Pritchett for his devotion and service to The Lexington School from the years 1961-1981.

Few students or teachers suffered from the winter blues this year! February was lively as it was host to a seventies convocation. Disco dancing, songs of the era and a timeline celebrated the school's third decade. Never have the hallways seen so much polyester!

In April, all legacy students gathered for a large photo. All students who had a relative graduate from TLS in the past were invited to the photo shoot. What a turn out! It truly illustrated how far The Lexington School has come. In so many ways the school has become a tradition for so many people.

An impressive student art show took place in Lexington's Civic Center. Every TLS student contributed a piece of artwork to the show. Not only did students, teachers and families visit the display, but local visitors were privileged to see how creative and talented Lexington School students are.

A 1980's all-school convocation was also held in April. A dance routine to a medley of eighties songs entertained the crowd, as did middle and ninth grade singers with a selection of songs, including "Walk Like an Egyptian" and "Lean on Me." Everyone began to understand just what the school must have been like in its fourth decade.

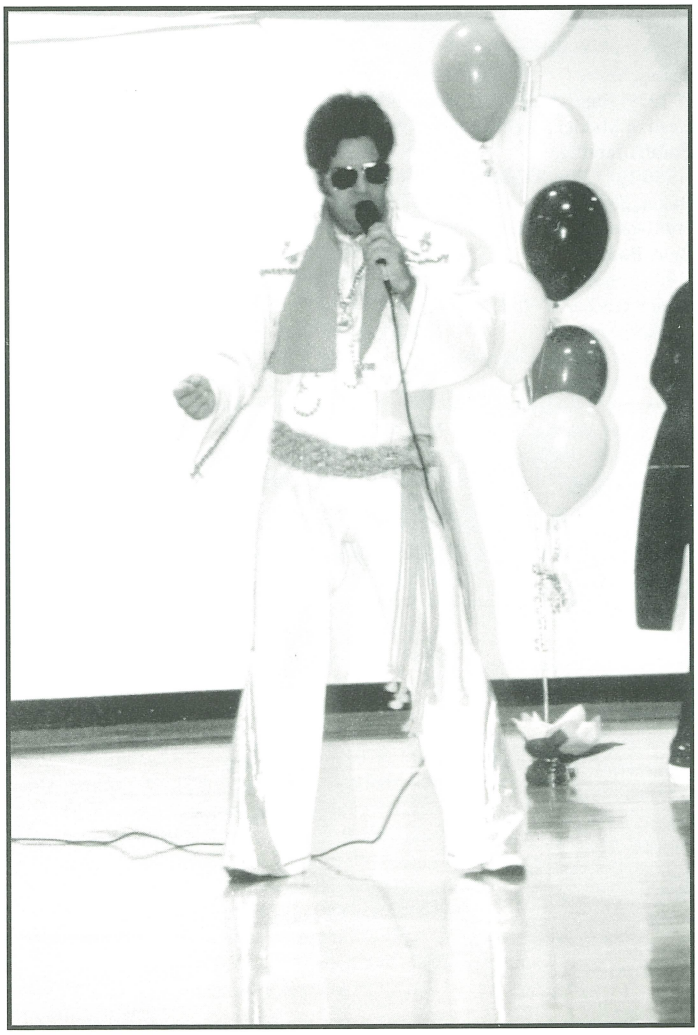

Perhaps the month most packed to the brim with celebratory activities was the month of May. Grandparents' Day started things rolling, as did the lower school Spring Sing. All visual art was brought back from the Civic Center and mounted in the art wing for all visitors to admire. Reunion 2000 was held on May 12, and hundreds returned to the reunion to see old friends, including former headmasters Luddy, Pritchett and Dr. David Lowry. Balloons were hung throughout to signify the school's important birthday. That same weekend, a TLS golf tournament brought a variety of faces together for some fun on the links. It was followed by a Family Picnic on the school grounds.

Celebration 2000 was the highlight of the year. The annual dinner and auction was unlike any before. It was held at the Keeneland Barn, and all that attended enjoyed archival and current photography, fine cuisine and camaraderie, and particularly the honoring of Josephine Abercrombie, Founder of The Lexington School.

What a year it has been at The Lexington School. Never have so many people returned in one year to celebrate and reconnect! It was an educational and meaningful year for current faculty members and students as they came to better understand the history of The Lexington School.

It doesn't seem possible to outshine this year, but you never know what The Lexington School is capable of. Who knows what the fiftieth anniversary will hold for the TLS community? Here's to continued enthusiasm and support.

MISSION STATEMENT

The Lexington School was founded to provide an education of the highest quality to students in preschool through ninth grade.

Within the context of a traditional academic curriculum, which incorporates the fine and performing arts
as well as physical education and extracurricular activities, the school sets high standards to challenge all boys and girls to be their best.

While fostering a love of learning, The Lexington School strives to impart a sense of moral values, social responsibility, and appreciation for the uniqueness of each individual.

The programs of the school promote personal and academic integrity
as well as develop initiative and self-confidence

The school provides activities which allow students to see and experience the benefits of community involvement.

The school welcomes boys and girls with diverse backgrounds and is responsive to the issues relating to differences among children.

The Lexington School strives to serve the evolving needs of its families.

The school responds to differences among students while recognizing the best interests of each child.

In a structured, nurturing environment, The Lexington School seeks to instill a life-long enthusiasm for learning and a strong work ethic.
